

Monday, April 6, 7–8:30 p.m.

William Pitt Union, Assembly Room

Speaker: Sandra Steingraber, ecologist and author

This lecture will explore the role of women in the construction of knowledge about the risks of extreme fossil fuel extraction, gender disparities in the distribution of economic costs and benefits, the disproportionate burden of harm that women experience when their communities become targeted for oil and gas extraction, and the rise of women leaders in the antifracking movement.

Monday, April 6, 4–5 p.m.

Students: Join us for a book discussion with Sandra Steingraber on Raising Elijah: Protecting Children in an Age of Environmental Crisis led by Olga Kuchinskaya, assistant professor, University of Pittsburgh Department of Communication.

Space is limited. Please contact Karen Billingsley at ksb@pitt.edu to register.

For more information, visit gsws.pitt.edu.

These events are generously supported by the Provost's Sustainability Fund, University Honors College, Environmental Studies Program, Humanities Center, the Departments of Sociology, Biology, Communication, and English; the Charles Crow Fund, and the Office of the Associate Dean for Undergraduate Studies.

UNIVERSITY OF PITTSBURGH
The DIETRICH School of Arts & Sciences